Soft Landings

Roderic Bunn, BSRIA

Rod's presentation will aim to bring SPACES members up to date with Soft Landings guidance, the relationship with (and direction of travel of) central Government's version of it, and then talk about some of the projects that have adopted it. It will also touch upon some of the new training activities being developed.

Roderic Bunn works for the UK research agency BSRIA and has a track record in building performance research. An experienced building researcher and technical author, he edited the Chartered Institution of Building Services Engineers Journal (CIBSE) for 16 years.

Between 1995-2001 he led the ground-breaking PROBE post-occupancy evaluation research project, after which he joined BSRIA as a building performance analyst.

Roderic is currently developing and managing the graduated aftercare process, Soft Landings. The method has been published by BSRIA and the Usable Buildings Trust in the Soft Landings Framework, a generic and open-source method that can be applied by clients and construction firms worldwide. Roderic runs the BSRIA Soft Landings User Group that aims to promote, educate and support those who wish to adopt Soft Landings for UK construction projects. He is author of several guides, the most recent being How to Procure Soft Landings.

Roderic was a Building Performance Evaluator for the UK's £8 million Building Performance Evaluation research project, and ran projects for InnovateUK's Innovative Refurbishment programme.

Roderic currently divides his time between BSRIA and University College London, where he is on secondment studying for an Engineering Doctorate. His research project is on occupant satisfaction and wellbeing metrics for Soft Landings projects.
